

Most people think the justice system is fair

Across age, education, ethnic and employment groups, most people believe the criminal justice system as a whole is fair, but there are exceptions – for example, only 46% of people who identify as black agree.

